

Learn more about MS Patient Advocacy Organizations

Your guide to navigating multiple sclerosis Patient
Advocacy Organizations and how they can best support you!

What is a patient advocacy organization?

Patient advocacy organizations are formally organized nonprofit groups that focus on specific medical conditions and are dedicated to helping people affected by those medical conditions and their families.

There are many groups in the United States dedicated to serving those living with multiple sclerosis and their families.

How can MS patient advocacy organizations help you and your loved ones?

Learn more about the different types of support offered by each group:

Find support groups

Connect with others in the MS community that have similar experiences.

Discover grants and financial support

Learn about where to find support for healthcare assistance, home care assistance, mobility equipment, and more.

Learn more about treatments

Discover different MS treatments: how they work, different classes of medications and side effects.

Get support as a care partner

Find specific resources that focus on your well-being as a care partner.

Advocate for MS policies and initiatives

Learn about how you can get involved to make a difference.

Participate in research or clinical trials

Learn more about clinical trials and discover opportunities in MS research.

Groups also offer lifestyle guidance, focusing on exercise programs, nutrition, and mental health.